

To whom it may concern:

I've learned recently of the initiative to halt XM radio's traffic and weather update. I'm appalled that anyone would attempt to infringe on such a wonderful and convenient service. I pay XM radio monthly for this service and I see nothing wrong with it. The only companies and interest groups that would attempt to stop the service are those competitors who aren't able to meet the new standard in radio that XM has set. These individuals need to realize that radio, like all other technology, has and will continue to evolve. And attempting to halt that evolution because of commercial interests is not only unethical but also unprofessional.
